in Grace Street.

While playing in Grace Street, between Sixth and Seventh Streets, vesterday afternoon about 4 o'clock, little starie Judd, eight years old, who lives at "The Homestead," 207 South Fourth Street, was run down by a slowly moving automobile belonging to tharles J. Ryan, of the Jefferson Hotel. The little girl escaped with a deep scalp wound and several painful bruises. The car was being driven by the chauffeur, A. G. Jennings.

Witnesses unite in relieving Jennings of all blaine. The chauffeur, from all accounts, was driving the car carefully and at an unusually moderate tate of speed. If the automobile had been running more rapidly, the child would almost certainly have been killed. In company with several other little girls, Marle Judd was playing along the sidewalk on her way to her home on South Fourth Street, when here, suddenly she leaped out into the street without looking for approaching vehicles, and ran squarely in front of Mr. Ryan's automobile.

Jennings scarcely had time to apply his centegency brakes in the effort to avoid the collision. The speed was slackened somewhat, however, and the child tossed to one side and free of the wheels. The driver brought his car to an immediate stop and joined with the spectators in carrying the girl into the office of Dr. R. C. Hooker, of 605 Cast Grace Street, where her wounds were examined and treated. When she recovered sufficiently, Dr. Hooker placed her iff his gar and carried her home.

At the Old Dominion Steamship offices, Agent Wyatt said the company was preparing for a rise of twelve feet at Richmond within the next twenty-four hours. This would put twenty-four hours. This would put the water four feet over the floor of the Old Dominion warehouse, cover all the lower wharves, and cover the whole section along old Lester Street.

Mr. Wyatt asked that special attention be called to the necessity of prompt removal of all freight to-day in order that the damage may be reduced to a minimum. The regular schedule of vessels between Richmond and Norfolk will be operated, subject to flood conditions.
